PREFACE.

This volume, as far as known, unique in its conception and scope, owes its existence to the casual thought that in the earlier years of this country's history New England largely furnished its ministry, but with the spreading of the ever-increasing population and the formation of new states, would do so no longer. Enough, however, had been done to merit permanent record. The compiler, as a native of New Hampshire, soon decided to chronicle her proportion of such ministry down to date, and for more than 30 years has taken great pleasure in bringing together the material herein included, of 2,509 who, in home and foreign lands, have sought to render valuable service to their generation in the line of their distinctive work. This has necessitated the examination of uncounted volumes and newspapers, an extensive correspondence, and many personal interviews. The endeavor has been to give the complete statistical life of all of all denominations as far as obtainable. Of a few the fact only has been learned. Of some the account is very meagre. Some early dropped from the public records and were lost from sight. The facts of some have been gathered from various sources, and a very few are incomplete because of the failure of individuals to make response to inquiries. It has been thought best to include licentiates in the record, as some have done valuable service while engaged in other professions, and others have died before reaching ordination.

Experience makes certain that this record, large as it is, is still incomplete for lack of knowledge, and the compiler will be glad if persons examining the volume and failing to find names that ought to be there will kindly inform him of such fact, in the interest of greater completeness.

While the endeavor has been to chronicle every thing relating to the statistical life of the individual, including a complete bibliography as far as possible, as will be seen personal eulogy has formed no part of the plan. Only now and then a noteworthy incident in an individual's history has been given, and then in briefest form. Doubtless mistakes will be found, for they are inevitable in bringing together such a mass of facts, but no pains has been spared to ensure entire accuracy. Sources of information are not always reliable. Where authorities have differed, the one most probable has been given.

It is hoped that the five indexes will be found eminently satisfactory, and the volume, as a book of reference, become invaluable to every public library. It certainly should find a place in every such library in New Hampshire.

In the preparation of the work, the valuable aid furnished by many is hereby gratefully acknowledged, and special thanks accorded to Miss Mary E. Stone of the Congregational Library of Boston, who in the earlier years of its compilation very kindly furnished much new material.

The hope is fondly cherished that the appearance of this volume will induce some one in each of the other New England states, native or resident, who has the necessary courage and perseverance, to undertake the work for his own state. The compiler of this volume will gladly give to such the benefit of his experience.

Concord, N. H., Jan. 1, 1906.
